This is a printing office... Crossroads of civilization... Refuge of all the arts against the ravages of time... Armoury of fearless truth against whispering rumour...
Incessant trumpet of trade.
From this place words may fly abroad, not to perish on waves of sound, not to vary with the writer's hand but fixed in time having been verified in proof.

Friend, you stand on sacred ground...

I've liked the Hobbit books and had a recent birthday. That's a time to give a gift to others. My mom had a first husband and I've been working on the ancestry of their daughters, my half-sisters, & nieces and nephews.

My mom's first husband, I discovered today, has a Gateway Ancestor to Edward I, d. 1307, via Norton Claypoole. LOL! Their dad & I are 15th cousins at third remove. It freaked my mom out when I told her that MY dad was her extremely distant cousin via Waltheof, executed 31 May 1086. Her first husband was her 15th cousin. In the decade since I've found my parents most recent common ancestor to be Roger Mortimer, 1st Earl of March, who was hanged 29 November 1330.

The Lygon family in England traces its history from the Manor of Madresfield in Worcestershire. This manor has been in continuous possession of the descendants of its first owners, the de Bracys, from near Domesday (1086) down to the present time.

The manor has passed from father to daughter in 1420 when Joan, only child of William de Bracy, married Thomas Lygon, who took up his residence there.

This record of the de Bracys and Lygons goes back to the time of the Norman Conquest, and when Warndon and Madresfield were possessed by the early de Bracy ancestors. Robert de Bracy was a favorite name in the de Bracy family and one "Robert" held the manor of Warndon in Worcester at Domesday. This was before the time surnames came into general use in England. (Ref: Nash II, p.452). A Richard de Bracy of Worcestershire occurs in 1168, and a William de Braci in 1176-77.

First Generation

1. William de Bracy is the first name shown in connection with the manor of Warndon in 1166 (Red Book Exchequer). He was succeeded by his son, Robert.

Second Generation

2. Robert de Braci was the successor to William in 1192. In 1196 Robert de Braci of Madresfield held one knight's fee; in the Book of Fees he is recorded as holding one hide in Holdfast, half a hide in Easton, and two hides in Warmedon in 1208-09. Walter de Baldenham made a claim against him of half a Knight's fee in Madresfield as his share of the inheritance of this Knight's fee which six sisters had divided between them. He died in 1220. (Ref: Nash II, p. 318).

A Robert de Braci was justice of assize in a plea of novel disseisin at Dunstable in 1228; but whether he was a member of the Worcestershire family does not appear. The first Bracy mentioned in the Muniments is Humphrey de Bracy of Eldfield about 1250. His exact relationship to the Madresfield Branch is, however, obscure and the Deed in which he is named did not originally form part of the family papers.

Third Generation

3. Robert de Bracy, who accompanied Maude de Cantilupe to Scotland in 1252 held one-third of a carucate at Ashton in the Hundred of Oswaldelawe. He had been in the company of John Esturmy, who was a rebel, and his land was in consequence taken into the king's hands.

Fourth Generation

4. William Braci, probably son of Robert de Braci, was Lord of Madresfield in 1250. He was exempted in 1253 from being put on the assizes and juries (Patent Rolls 199). He made a grant of Land in the Manor to Gilbert Fremon of Clevelode. This was in the last years of the reign of King Henry III and is the earliest mention of Bracy of Madresfield in the Muniments. A positive date for this William de Bracy is afforded by the grant to Richard, son of Adam Chut, in 1280. A subsidy of 10 shillings for his lands in Madresfield was paid by him in 1280. In 1283 William de Bracy and Robert de Bracy were witness to a charter of Great Malvern Priory.

William de Bracy was in ill health in 1282, but lived until 1289, when he died and was buried at Great Malvern. (Vic. Hist. Worc., Vol IV, p. 120.)

In 1290 there is a mention of the Lady Maud in the Muniments. The Henry who appears in the grant to Maud de Bracy, wife of William, was probably her younger son; he and his wife Alice were parties to a Fine concerning land in Clevelode in 1323; this Henry de Bracy was father of Robert who is witness to a charter of his cousin in 1345.

Fifth Generation

5. Robert de Bracy is first shown fighting against King Henry III at the famous Battle of Evesham in 1265, and had lands as Ashton (Inquisitions October 1265). Evesham is only a few miles from Madresfield. In the Patent Rolls he is frequently mentioned as a conservator of the peace and as a commissioner for Worcester 1297 to 1310, and in Gloucester 1313 (Close Rolls) and for various purposes up to 1321. Robert de Bracy was a witness in Worcester 1282 and 1289, assessor of the Subsidy for Worcester 1283.

In 1291, he was a witness to a charter of the Bishop of Worcester. In 1297, he was enrolled as a Knight of Essex, non-resident, for defense of the coast, and having lands worth 20 pounds in Salop, was summoned to serve overseas. These lands were evidently those of his wife, for he and his wife Maud _____ had a suit on account of lands in Salop June, 1301 (Close Rolls). Robert de Bracy was Knight for the shire of Worcester 1300 to 1305 (Parliamentary Writs) and was appointed to raise Knights in Worcester for defense of the realm January 14, 1300 (Close Rolls). These were probably for service against the Welsh or Scots against whom King Edward I. was waging war.

In the Madresfield Muniments his name occurs in eight deeds; the earliest for which there is a positive date is on June 17, 1302, and the latest in 1316. In 1316, Robert held three Knight's fees in Wermyndon, Madresfield and Leye, and Peter de Salso Marisco (Saltmarsh held a messuage of him in Hagberewe by the service of a half of a Knight's fee and rendering a pair of gloves yearly. A settlement of the manors of Madresfield, Warmyndon, and Leigh was made by him in 1317, on Robert de Bracy, son of William de Bracy, and Joan his wife. The younger Robert de Bracy was clearly a grandson, and the settlement was probably made on the occasion of his marriage.

When the elder Robert de Bracy died does not appear, but it was probably after 1321 when Robert de Bracy(No. 7, below) occurs as a witness. This Robert de Bracy was a commissioner for raising the men of Worcester against the Scots August 5, 1316. He was Overlord of Hanley Castle June 20, 1327 and an overlord in Salop May 25, 1335.

Sixth Generation

6. William de Bracy, son of Robert, does not appear often in the records, as his father evidently lived to be aged. On February 28, 1320 he was inspector of a charter of William de Blauminster because Blauminster had given Stone Church lands to Reney Abbey. A grant of free warren in his lands was made to Robert de Bracy in 1328, in which year William was appointed keeper of the manor of Hanley Castle and of the chase at Malvern. William de Bracy was Knight for the Shire of Worcester in 1338.

Seventh Generation

7. Robert de Bracy, his son, is mentioned in June 1333, when he and his brother Richard were accused of hunting unlawfully in Malvern Chase. Robert de Bracy was clearly a great huntsman; in 1334 there was a complaint against him for breaking the bishop's park at Blockley; in 1347 Hugh Le De Spencer complained that Sir Robert accompanied by his brother Richard and Walter de Bradeles, the parson of Madresfield, had entered his chase at Malvern, co. Worcester, and carried away his deer and fish (Patent Roll, p. 469).

There was a like charge against Sir Robert in 1354. However, this did not interfere with his appointment to act on a variety of commissions in the county, nor with his service as a justice of the peace. He was commissioner of Oyer and Terminer, when about 1343 he investigated the shortage of the Collector for the town of Wyche in Worcester. In 1345 he was Lord of Madresfield. He fought as a knight at Crecy in the division of the Prince of Wales.

He was with Thomas Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, and was therefore in the thickest of the fight. Wrothelsey in his "Crecy and Calais" (p. 179) says: "Among those who served in person who were exonerated from the assessment to find men at arms and arches, was Sir Robert Bracy who served in the retinue of Thomas Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, at the date of the passage of the Hogue in Normandy and at the Battle of Crecy and siege of Calais."

In 1348 Sir Robert Bracy was Commissioner of Oyer and Terminer to investigate the death of John, son of William de Cartere, killed at Worcester. It was found that certain persons had violated the sanctuary of the Church of St. Mary at Worcester and killed the said John (Patent Rolls, p. 179). Also in 1348 he was exempted for life from serving on assizes, etc. (Patent Roll, p. 452). He was knight of the shire of Worcester in 1361 (Close Rolls, pp. 65-66), but was dead before 1378, as Juliana _____, his wife, as relict of Robert de Bracy, was patron of the church at Warndon in 1378 (Nash II, 452).

In the deeds of Madresfield, Robert II de Bracy appears only between 1344 and 1357. But he may be identified with the Robert de Bracy who was on the commission of peace for Worcestershire in 1362, and was a commissioner of array in that county in 1366. The Robert de Bracy who was keeper of Salcey Forest, Northants, in 1378-89, forester of Dean in 1384, and warden of the Marshalsea in 1383, is probably the younger son of Robert II.

Eighth Generation

8. William de Bracy succeeded his father, Sir Robert de Bracy. There is reference to William Bracy, son of Robert, in 1346 when he accounted for one-fifth of a Knight's fee in Holdfast, which Robert de Bracy formerly held. William de Bracy was a patron at Warndon, 1370 to 1376 (Nash). On May 6, 1385, William de Bracy, as Lord of Warndon, joined with his wife Joan _____ in a grant to John Henry of Smyghte; this Deed is the earliest on which a Bracy seal showing the arms (a fess, in chief two mullets) has been preserved.

William Bracy, Lord of Madresfield, occurs in deeds between 1388 and 1390, and William Bracy, Lord of Warndon and Madresfield in 1396; but whether these deeds refer to the father or the son is uncertain. In 1376 William Bracy went to Ireland with James Butler, Earl of Ormond, on the King's service. He probably died about 1390 as his wife, Lady Joan Bracy, held her first court for the manor of Madresfield in that year.

Ninth Generation

9. William de Bracy, son of William de Bracy, married in 1404, Isabel _____ and had an only daughter, Joan. See below. In the 7th year of King Henry VI (1428-29) William was an esquire returning into the exchequer to attend the King in person with horse in arms in France. This was probably after Joan of Arc had captured Orleans in that year and the English were marshaling their forces against her. (Nash II, 452).

He presented to the church at Madresfield in 1415-19-20-33 and in 1431 he was returned as Lord of the manor of Madresfield (Feudal Aids V., p. 327). He is described in 1431 holding Madresfield by the service of half a Knight's fee. In September 1432 he and his wife are joined in a lease of a messuage called Holond in Madresfield. He was witness to a deed relating to land at Madresfield on January 10, 1435.

He must have died before February 6, 1450, when Isabel demised the Manor of Madresfield to her grandson William Lygon, reserving to her use the Gatehouse within the upper and lower chambers and two chimneys attached thereto. There is no later reference to Isabel, who must have been about 70 years of age in 1450 and probably died not long after.

Tenth Generation

10. Joan Bracy married, before 1423 (probably 1419), Thomas Lygon, son of Richard Lygon. On January 20, 1423, the Manor of Madresfield of Warndon was settled by William and Isabel Bracy on Thomas and Joan Lygon.

Children:

1. William Lygon, married Elizabeth Arundel, daughter of Rainford Arundel
2. Thomas Lygon. See below.

Eleventh Generation

11. Thomas Lygon, second son of Thomas Lygon and Joan Bracy, born at Madresfield Court, married Anne Gifford, daughter of Nicholas Gifford.

Children:

1. Jane Lygon
2. Richard Lygon, eldest son of Thomas. See below.

He died on April 10, 1507.

Twelfth Generation

12. Richard Lygon, Senior, eldest son of Thomas, born at Madresfield Court, did not outlive his father very long, so he does not appear very often in the record. He was over thirty years old at his father's death. He married not later than 1490 Anne Beauchamp, born in 1434, and died in January 1502-03.

This was a very important marriage, for Anne Beauchamp was 2nd daughter and co-heir of Richard Beauchamp, 2nd Lord Beauchamp of Powyck. Richard died in 1512.

The only references to Richard Lygon in the Muniments are in August, 1507, when he acquired 'Brodmedow' in Powycke, on March 1, 1508, and on June 2, 1511, when he granted a lease of a messuage called Brightyntone. He was Justice of the Peace in Worcester in 1509 and in 1510 had custody of the lands, wardship, and marriage of Richard, son and heir of William Reade, his brother-in-law. (Letters and Papers Foreign and Domestic Henry VIII, 1510, p. 321).

He and his wife had the following children:

1. Richard Lygon, Jr, his successor. See below.
2. Thomas Lygon, d.s.p.
3. John Lygon, married Eleanor Hickford.
4. Edward Lygon, d.s.p.
5. George Lygon, a priest, who graduated as Bachelor of Canon Law at Oxford in 1531. This explains why he did not share in the disposition made by his mother, though he was one of the executors. He died in 1593.

6. William Lygon, is mentioned as living in Powycke in 1568.

7. Roger Lygon, married Katherine Buckler, daughter of Sir William Denys of Pucklechurch and therefore a sister of the wife of Roger's nephew William Lygon. Roger died in 1584.

8. Michael Lygon, married Ursula Hornyold. He died about 1583.

Richard Lygon, Sr. died in Madresfield on May 1, 1512.

Thirteenth Generation

13. Richard Lygon, Junior, eldest son, was 21 years of age when his father died, and was probably born in 1490. On September 15, 1512 he granted his mother for her dower in Gloucestershire the Manor of Mattysdon. He married, not later than 1511 in Worcester, Margaret Greville (Grevell), daughter of William Greville (Grevell), a Justice of the Court of Common Pleas in 1510, who had been one of the feoffes of Richard Beauchamp. With her he acquired Arle Court near Cheltenham, where he appears to have lived during his mother's life.

After her death there was some differences between him and his younger brother, which was settled by a friendly arbitration. In 1523, Richard was on a commission to collect the subsidy in Worcester (L. & P., p. 1361). He was knighted at the coronation of Queen Anne Boleyn on May 30, 1535. In 1534, he was on the commission to make inquisition (P. M.) on the lands and heir of John Lytilton of Frankley Weston. He was Sheriff of Gloucestershire 1534-35 and of Worcestershire 1548-49.

In 1535 he was Justice as a session held at Great Malvern and bound over James Asche, parson of Staunton, to the council for calling the king antichrist. In 1536, Sir Richard Lygon was called to furnish 100 men to be sent against the northern rebels and to attend the king in person. He served in the French War, 1544. In 1545, the expenses of the Hundred Courts of the town of Slaughter were held by Richard Lygon, Chief Steward, and also he was Chief Steward of the King's Court at Cheltenham. Margaret, his wife, died in 1542, and Richard married (2) Joan, who survived him. Sir Richard died March 20, 1556.

Fourteenth Generation

14. William Lygon, eldest son, of Redgrove and Madresfield, born in 1518, was 44 years old at his father's death. While still under age he married in the autumn of 1529 Eleanor Dennis, daughter of Sir William Dennis (Denys) of Durham in Gloucestershire and his wife Anne Berkeley, daughter of Maurice Berkeley, Lord Berkeley, who died in 1506, and his wife, Isabel Meade. The contract of marriage contains interesting particulars as to the provision for the young people. Richard Lygon and William Dennis were to find their children in apparel according to their degree, and William Dennis was to find his daughter lodging so long as Margery and Anne Lygon were alive.

Like his father, William Lygon before his possession to Madresfield lived at Arle, and seems to have been in possession of the family estates at Mattisdon, Uckington, Dormiston, and Cromhall in Gloucestershire; he was also one of the justices of the Hundred of Cheltenham. In 1538, he was among the gentlemen listed by Lord Cromwell as meet to be preferred in the King's service (Patent Rolls, p. 49). On July 9, 1540, he had a grant. He and his wife had a son, Thomas Lygon, who married his cousin, Frances Dennis

In the Kingdom of England the term justiciar originally referred to any officer of the King's Court. The Chief Justiciar (later known simply as the Justiciar) was roughly equivalent to a modern Prime Minister. They ruled England when Henry II was absent to Normandy, and thus, were held in great trust by The Crown. What intrigued me were the families of Justiciars, especially Robert Beaumont, and Richard Lucy, Justiciars of England for Henry II, King of England, and father to King John. Many Surety's were trained justices of law, which is rarely noted.

Fully twenty, of the twenty-four Magna Carta Surety Barons are shown here, in sixty-two lines, to be tied by kinship, and/or, marriage. Many of these, or, their wives, are descendant of Robert Beaumont, Justiciar of England (*1) and/or Richard Lucy, Justiciar of England (*2). Surety's are capitalized names. The twenty-fifth was William Hardell who was the Mayor of London and whom we know nothing about.

Richard FitzGilbert, de Clare, was son of Gilbert de Brionne, son of Geoffrey, Count of Eu, who was an illegitimate child of Richard I of Normandy. Thus, cousins to King John, as their descendants would certainly have known. King John was adjudged by his Peers. ♦ = ancestors to me. ‡ = no descendants.

In the year 1371 Doña Constanza, daughter of the deceased (and dethroned) King of Castile, Don Pedro I (The Cruel) went to England to become the bride of King Edward III's son, John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster. Among the young Castilian ladies of aristocratic birth who accompanied her was Doña Sancha de Ayala, daughter of Don Diego Gómez de Guzmán de Toledo and his wife, Doña Inés de Ayala.

About 1373 Doña Sancha married an English knight, Sir Walter Blount, of the Blounts of Sodington, county Worcester. On 26 February in the first year of King Richard II's reign (1378), the Duke of Lancaster, who claimed the thrones of Castile and Leon in right of his wife, granted to Sir Walter and Sancha (for their good service to him) an annuity of 100 marks a year; this grant was confirmed "for their lives in survivorship" by King Richard, April 26, 1399. Records reveal payments to Sancha at various times; once (2 January 1380) her name was associated with that of "Phelippe Chaucy", i.e., Philippa Chaucer, wife of the author of the Canterbury Tales, Geoffrey Chaucer. On this occasion she was described by the Duke of Lancaster as "our very dear attendant" (nostre treschere compaigne) "dame Senche Blount".

Sir Walter figured prominently in the affairs of England during the times of Edward III and Henry IV. He was a close associate of John of Gaunt, and the latter made him an executor of his will and left him a small legacy. In 1367, Sir Walter accompanied the Black Prince and the Duke of Lancaster (John of Gaunt) upon the expedition into Spain to aid Peter the Cruel, King of Castile, and was at the battle of Marjara on April 3, 1367 which restored Peter to his throne. Sir Walter fell at the battle of Shrewsbury, July 21, 1403, wherein, being standard bearer, he was arrayed in the same style of armour as his royal master and was slain in single combat by Earl Douglas who believed he was in combat with the king himself. Sir Walter was slain in the course of the battle of Shrewsbury, July 21, 1403, and Shakespeare, who drew his facts mainly from Holinshed's "Chronicles" immortalized him in his Henry IV though he called him Sir Walter Blunt.

Three years after her husband's death, Dame Sancha founded a chantry in the Hospital of St. Leonard, Alkington, county Derbyshire. Her son-in-law, John Sutton, (husband of Constance Bount) died on August 29, 1406. On November 23 following, Dame Sancha was granted commission of the keeping of all the lands late of John Sutton, tenant in chief, during the minority of his six-year-old son and heir, John Sutton; her duties included "finding a competent maintenace for the heir, maintaining the houses and buildings and supporting the charges." In the same month the escheator in Worcestershire was ordered "to take of Constance who was the wife of John Sutton an oath etc. and in the presence of Sancha who was the wife of Walter Blount knight, to whom the king has committed the ward thereof, or of her attorneys, to assign the said Constance dower of the said John's lands."

Dame Sancha Blount made her will (still in existence) in 1415, and died in 1418. She was buried beside her husband in the Collegiate Church of St. Mary, The Neward, Leicester. Sancha de Ayala, Lady Bount, the ancestress of several English settlers in America, was descended from some of the most illustrious Castilian families. Through her father she belonged to the House of Guzmán (also called Toledo) which produced many noble families in Spain and a series of wives and mistresses for Spanish and Portuguese kings. Her mother, Ins de Ayala (by whose surname Sancha was known), was sprung from the great House of Ayala of Toledo, which traced its pedigree in the male line to the House of Haro, Lords of Biscay. The proof of Sancha's parentage is contained in a family genealogy begun about 1385 by her maternal uncle, Pedro López de Ayala, Grand Chancellor of Castile. He stated that Doña Sancha "married a Knight of England, who was called Sir Walter Blount." Sancha and Sir Walter had two children to leave descendants, Constance and Sir Thomas Blount. Sir Thomas was the father of two sons.

(1) Constance Blount is ancestress of Queen Elizabeth II, Lady Diana Spencer Windsor, both the grandmother and mother of Prince William & Prince Harry, their uncles wife and cousins' mother: Sarah Ferguson, Sir Winston Churchill, George Washington, George Mason, DeWitt Clinton, Grover Cleveland, Gerald Ford, J.P. Morgan, Adlai Stevenson III, John Foster & Allen Dulles, Lizzie Borden, Archibald MacLeish, Richard Gere, Chevy Chase, and Paris Hilton.

(2) Sir Thomas Blount, whose son Thomas is the ancestor of Anne Marbury Hutchinson, Katherine Marbury Scott, William Wentworth 'The Elder', George Washington (again), Benjamin Harrison, William Henry Harrison, Franklin Roosevelt, George H. W. Bush, George W. Bush, Jeb Bush, General Robert E. Lee, Admiral Richard Byrd, General George S. Patton, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr., John McCain, Mitt Romney, Susan B. Anthony, Eleanor Roosevelt, Amelia Earhart, Story Musgrave, Erskine Childers, Benjamin Crowninshield Bradlee, Olivia De Havilland, Joan Fontaine, Lee Marvin, Marilyn Monroe, Ted Danson, Benedict Cumberbatch, Viggo Peter Mortenson, Jordan Peele, Mary Chapin Carpenter, and Britney Spears.

Sir Thomas Blount's second son, Sir Walter Blount, 1st Lord Mountjoy, whose descendants include Roger Ludlow, first Deputy-Governor of the Colony of Connecticut.

Sancha's older brother, Don Pedro Suárez was the progenitor of much of Europe's nobility. He married Doña Juana de Orozco, Lady of Pinto and had Inés de Guzmán or de Toledo. By her second husband, Don Diego Fernández de Córdoba, Marshal of Castile, she had a daughter, Doña María Fernández. Maria, 4th Lady of Casarrubios del Monte; m. Don Fadrique Enriquez and had Doña Juana Enríquez. Juana, married (1447) as his second wife, John II, King of Aragon and had Ferdinand II of Aragon, better known as Ferdinand V, The Catholic, King of Castile, who married the celebrated Queen Isabella of Castile and had several children including:

- Emperor Charles V (Charles I of Spain), ancestor of the Habsburg and Bourbon Kings of Spain;
- Juana "La Loca" ("the crazy"), Queen of Castile, who married Philip the Handsome, Archduke of Austria;
- Ferdinand I, who was progenitor of the Habsburg Holy Roman Emperors and Emperors of Austria, all of the present European sovereigns (including Queen Elizabeth II of Great Britain), most of the dethroned dynasties of Europe, the Calvert family of Maryland, a branch of the Morris family of Philadelphia, and the Custis-Lee family of the Arlington Estate in Virginia; and Catherine of Aragon who married first the Tudor Prince, Arthur and second, his brother, King Henry VIII of England.

" John Dickinson said of life before the new British policies. "We had a multitude of markets for our provisions, lumber and iron." But then Britain changed everything for the worse. The new policy enforcing mercantilism "sweeps off our silver and gold in a torrent to Great Britain." Now "drained" of hard money, "we are prohibited by new and stricter restraints being laid on our [foreign] trade, from procuring these coins as we are used to; and from instituting among ourselves bills or credit [paper money]." And then came the new taxes. "In this exhausted condition," Dickinson wrote, "our languishing country is to strive and take up and to totter under the additional burden of the Stamp Act." "From whence is the silver to come, and which the taxes imposed by this act, and the duties imposed by the other late acts, are to be paid?" he asked. "Or how will our merchants and lower ranks of people on whom these regulations will fall first, and with the greatest violence, bear this additional load." To Dickinson, it was a question of survival: "What shall we expect, when the exhausted colonies shall feel the STAMP ACT drawing off, as it were, the last drops of their blood." (Dickinson, 1895, 217-218, 228). In the minds of Dickinson and others, Britain's policies worked together to bring great distress to the colonies. Dickinson scarcely exaggerated. British policies made the rural economy in most places a disaster. Across the colonies, farmers found themselves unable to pay debts: they were hauled into court: and, when they still could not pay, the courts foreclosed, taking away their livestock or land. Although the tide of lawsuits ebbed and flowed in the decade before 1776, courts in many rural counties processed enough debt cases to cover anywhere between 20 and 75 percent of the population (Bushman, 1976, 119). With the dire scarcity of money, most of these cases ended up in the hands of the county sheriff, who confiscated or auctioned the property. For example, in the Pennsylvania countryside, lawsuits for unpaid debts generated enough court orders for sheriffs to confiscate property or hold an auction to reach, anywhere from 20 and 50 percent of the taxable population. In Philadelphia County, between 1769 and 1771, the court issued 2,120 orders to foreclose property, enough to cover 20% of the taxable population of the city and county. Northwest of Philadelphia in Northhampton County, between 1766 and 1775, the sheriff executed 1,170 orders to foreclose property, or enough to cover 42 percent of the taxable population (Philadelphia County Execution Docket 1769-1771) . . . [Peter Schmuck and Steven Collins, May 4, 1765 pers. comm.] 8] Since so little money was around, the prices for farmers received for the property they sold tended to be low. In Virginia, property sold at about half its worth, meaning that debtors had to "pay perhaps double what they owe, as one observer put it. The prices at Pennsylvania auctions were perhaps even worse, as storekeeper and farmer Peter Schmuck discovered. Although Schmuck had sued seventy-six of his customers, only four could pay under court order. So he had the sheriff foreclose the property of the seventy-two who could not come up with the money. The auctioned property, however, did not earn him enough to repay his creditor, a Philadelphia merchant. Consequently, the merchant sued Schmuck, forcing him to sell the remaining inventory of his store for less than half its value. Even this was not enough to repay the merchant, and he ultimately had to sell his farm. Years before Schmuck had purchased the farm for £300; now in 1767, amid the cash scarcity, he was forced to part with it for just £50---or less than 17 percent of what it had been worth (Holton, 1999, 63; Peter Schmuck and Stephen Collins, May 4, 1765 and September 23, 1767, pers. comm.).

For many farmers, the sheriff's auction was only the start of a new phase of the problem. All this litigation meant high court costs for the farmer. Nearly every piece of paper the court generated a fee. There were fees for the judges, lawyers, sheriffs, and constables, for the mileage any of them had to travel to issue a warrant, assess property, or hold an auction. The 1765 Stamp Act made matters worse, as it put a new duty in gold and silver on every piece of paper the court generated. With all these fees and taxes, court costs often grew to more than the debt that had landed the farmer in court in the first place."

"On May 4, 1765, Peter Schmuck of Hardwick, New Jersey, wrote Collins: "I received thy letter yesterday by which I understand thy uneasiness which I am sorry for and should have come to Town before now if I could get my money in which I have been trying ever since Last Fall but all in vain and now I began to sue and it seems to be all one. Of twenty-five persons which I suit at one time I got my money by only four and the rest I must get by execution, which it seems to go very hard. For such times never was known among people for there is never a week but there are some vendues of the sheriffs and constables." In 1767 Collins sold up Schmuck, who wrote him a scornful letter, September 23. Collins in commenting on the situation said, May 21, 1768: "Sheriff, coroner, and I think Schmuck are all dependent on each others Lenity, either having executions against each other or debts due."

Remonstrance of Lord Cornbury by the New Jersey & New York Colonial Assemblies. Delivered by Samuel Jennings speaker of the said Assemblies at Burlington the 8th day of May, 1707.

...Tell us the title by what right or law are we thus used ; that may a little mitigate our pain? Your answer hitherto hath been this, That it was a conquered country ; and that the king, being the conqueror, he has powers to make laws, raise money, &c. and that this power jure regale, the king hath vested in the duke, and by that right and sovereignty, the duke demands that custom we complain of.." 'But suppose the king were an absolute conqueror in the case depending, doth his power extend equally over his own English people, as over the conquered?

...For what is good land without good laws? The better the worse. And if we could not assure people of an easy and free government, both with respect to spiritual and worldly property---that is, an uninterrupted liberty of conscience , and an inviolable possession of their civil rights and freedoms by a just and wise government ; for it were a madness to leave a free, good, and improved country, to plant in a wilderness ; and there adventure many thousands of pounds to give an absolute title to another to tax us at will and pleasure. This single consideration, we hope, will excuse our desire of the government ; and not asserted for the sake of power but safety ; and not only for ourselves but for others, that the plantation might be encouraged.

...And we cannot but be uneasy, when we find by these new methods of government, our liberties and properties so much shaken, that no man can say he is master of either, but holds as tenant by courtesy and at will, and may be stripped of them at pleasure. Liberty is too valuable a thing to easily parted with, and when such mean inducements procure such violent endeavors to tear it from us, we must take leave to say, they have neither heads, hearts, nor souls, that are not moved by the miseries of their country, and are not forward with their utmost power, lawfully to redress them."

"When the house had retired, (Lord) Cornbury, with some emotion, told those with him, that (Speaker) Jennings had impudence enough to face the devil. Smith's History, 1765, Chapter XV, p. 295 [1707]

The American Revolution was spurred, as writings at the time assert, for the lack of representational government for taxes paid. The Consent of the Governed. My ancestor, Speaker Samuel Jennings asserted this at The Remonstrance of Lord Cornbury, in 1707. Having read Samuel Smith's 'History of New Jersey' and knowing that Samuel Smith, historian, was well known to the Founders, they were also familiar with Speaker Jennings arguments. I had frisson when first reading the remonstrance and recognizing this.

From the oldest book(1765) in the Americas that I can read of a historical ancestor here or on Wikipedia..

A.D. 1708. S. Jening's death and character. Here also we part with his opponent S. Jenings; his indisposition continued about twelve months, and then finished his life : His many services have occasioned him to be often mentioned : His profession of religion was that of the people called quakers ; he was early an approved minister among them, and so continued until his death ; common opinion, apt to limit this sphere of action, will however allow general rules to have their exceptions, as instances now and then, though perhaps but rarely, occur, where variety of talents have united in the same individual, and yet not interfered ; such, the accounts of those times (stripp'd of the local uncertainties of faction and party) tell us, was the circumstance with regards to Jenings ; that his authority, founded on experienc'd candour, probity, and abilities, enlarged opportunities, rendered him not in one capacity or to one society only, but generally useful : It is mentioned, that he was of an obliging, affectionate disposition, yet of a hasty temper ; that he notwithstanding managed it with circumspection and prudence, so that few occasions escaped to the disadvantage of his character, or of any cause he engaged in ; that he saw the danger to which his natural impetuosity exposed him ; knew his preservation lay in a close attention to his cooler prospects, and diligently guarding in that spot, experienced the benefit of many trying events ; that his integrity and fortitude in all stations were acknowledged ; that his judgment was the rule of his conduct, and by what can now be gathered, this seems to have been but seldom injudiciously founded ; that alive to the more generous emotions of a mind form'd to benevolence and acts of humanity, he was a friend to the widow, the fatherless and the unhappy ; tender, compassionate, disinterested, and with great opportunities in every shape left but a small estate ; that abhorring oppression in every shape, his whole conduct discover'd a will to relieve and befriend mankind, far above the littleness of party or sinister views ; that his sentiments of right and liberty, were formed on the revolution establishment, a plan successfully adapted to the improvement of a new country, or any country ; that he was not withstanding all this sometimes thought stiff and impracticable, but chiefly on account of his political attachments ; yet that there were instances, where better knowledge of his principles, and the sincerity with which he acted, totally effaced those impressions, and left him friends where none were expected : Much of his time, we have seen, was long devoted to the publick, with a will to be useful, occasions were not wanting ; West-Jersey and Pennsylvania, and New Jersey after the surrender, for near twenty eight years successfully, were repeated witnesses of his conduct in various capacities ; he studied peace, and the welfare of mankind ; but in some instances met with ungrateful returns ; and tho' his endeavors did not altogether succeed to his mind, he survived personal accusation, in a great measure, with respect to himself ; and as to the publick, lived just long enough to see it emerging from an unpromising state of litigation and controversy, to more quiet than had been known for many years : His three daughters, (who were all the children he left) intermarried with three brothers, of the name of Stephenson, whose posterity now reside in New-Jersey and Pennsylvania.

I had some coffee and went on a tear, adding info from a bounty of papers I've recently found. I hope I've not bruised feelings. I'd been following Hudson and sought to close my maternal Ligon gateway ancestry. I've Capt. William Lawrence, of Flushing, as a paternal gateway, and recent discovery leads a solid paper-trail to William Wentworth, The Elder. The 2nd gateway ancestor of my father. The Blount line is amazing. Gary Boyd Roberts 2018 RD900 includes a long line of Sancha de Alaya kinships to Che Guevarra. Vasco de Gama. Spanish New World ancestry is certainly well-documented as our own. There was Canadian & esp French Royal ancestry. Again, amazing kinships.

Thank you Wilson-16488 for the finest possible advice to a beginner at WT. Chicago Manual of Style was first to me important only for Chapter One. 1.1 A folded sheet of paper is a folio. 1.2 The right side of the fold is called the verso. The verso side is always odd numbered. 1.3 The left side of the fold is called recto. The recto side is always even numbered. etc.
